AS LA FOLLETTE SEES BEVERIDGE

Wisconsin Statesman Declares Indian Not of Taft Crowd.

ALDRICH DISLIKES HIM

Leading Insurgent from the North Praises Beveridge for Standing Out on the Tariff Bill in Spite of Aldrich and Cannon.

Senator LaFollette of Wisconsin is one of the "insurgents" who, according to President Taft, abandoned the Republican party when he voted against the Payne-Aldrich-Cannon tariff bill. But Mr. LaFollette edits a magazine in which he talks back. In a recent article, speaking approvingly of Senator Beveridge, a brother "insurgent," he says this:

"He was frowned upon and glared at. He was reproved and intimidated and belittled by Aldrich and his associates. He was one of seven Republicans senators who voted against the final adoption of the Aldrich-Payne-Cannon conference bill."

And this:
"Beveridge refuses to be controlled by a false leadership in congress. He is through with being 'regular.' He is reducing his ideals to practical effort. He is not only preaching ideals, he is voting them."

But President Taft who Mr. Beveridge favored for president nomination against Mr. Fairbanks is traveling over the country (at public expense) declaring that the leadership in congress which Mr. Beveridge refused to follow was not "false." And Mr. Taft, like Aldrich and his associates, has "frowned upon and glared at" Beveridge and the other insurgents to the extent of practically reading them out of the Republican party. Under these circumstances it is no wonder that Beveridge is "through with being regular." So, therefore, what will the Indiana Republicans do about it?

ERROR IN SCHOOL REPORT

There were two errors in the article Saturday concerning the first months' report of the public schools. Grades 4 and 3 of district no. 3, earned 99.1 per cent. of attendance, instead of 91.1 per cent. and at no. 2, it was grade 8 that had a full 100 per cent. of attendance.

THE MUNCIE CONVENTION

Echoes of the Women's Christian Temperance Union Meeting

WAS THE 36TH MEETING

Greencastle Representatives and Delegates Tell of the Annual Convention and the Work Done There.

The thirty-sixth annual convention of the Indiana Woman's Christian Temperance Union opened in the High street M. E. church of Muncie on Friday, October 1 with an attendance far beyond the conventions expectations.

The first session was called to order by the State President, Mrs. Culla J. Vaylinger. The roll call showed that every county in the State was represented, and that each was making progress in the temperance work.

During the afternoon of Friday, the vice president, Mrs. Elizabeth Stanley announced the annual address of the State President.

Mrs. Vaylinger's address in part is as follows:

"Greetings to the women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Indiana. We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers, remembering without ceasing your work of faith and labor of love and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father.

"As I look into your faces so full of joy for the past, and more determined for the future, my heart lows before our great leader, and I thank him that he has permitted me to wear the beautiful symbol under which we wage our peaceful warfare, for God and home and every land. It is a true saying—but nevertheless very true that 'The Woman is the greatest sufferer because of man's use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage.'"

"There is no class of citizens so interested when an election in which the open saloon is the issue, as the women of the country—this was proven in every election held in the state during the past year.

"The Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized in 1873 for the purpose of carrying forth the standard, on which was emblazoned the words 'Total abstinence for the individual and legal prohibition of the liquor traffic.'"

"In 1874 the following resolution written by Frances E. Willard and unanimously adopted as a rule of conduct of the National W. C. T. U. 'Resolved that reorganizing that our cause is and will be combated by mighty, determined, and relentless foes, we will, trusting in Him who is the Prince of Peace, meet argument with argument, misjudgment with patience, difficulties and dangers with prayer.'"

"We adopted as our method of procedure work along the lines of agitation, education and organization. The leaders of this great society saw the opportunity to unite women into an organization which would furnish the fulcrum by means of which they might make their united influence felt in moving the world Godward. So the call went forth in the early history of our work for Christian women who would rally to the call of responsibility and unite for systematic work to put down the dram shop, exalt the home, redeem mankind and uplift womanhood.

The night service had been designated as a welcome night. Mrs. Katie Waller on behalf of the W. C. T. U. welcomed the convention to the city of Muncie in very beautiful and touching language.

The second welcome address was given by Mayor Guthrie who had been sick and was not able to leave his bed until 4 o'clock; he was informed by his doctor that he must not go to church, but he was there and gave a very glowing address on behalf of the city.

He said that 43 saloon keepers in Muncie had their property confiscated and put out of business against what the mayor's friends advised him to do. "I have the honor of putting the other one hundred out of business and before my term of office expires Muncie will be saloonless."

Dr. Crawford of the high street M. E. Church welcomed the convention on behalf of the 6000 church members of Muncie.

Mrs. Elizabeth Stanley, vice president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union responded to these welcomes in a happy way, saying that there had been times when she could not find meeting places.

WILL DISCUSS COLLEGE AFFAIRS

President McConnell to Meet with Gov. Marshall and College Men

EXPENSES TO BE CONSIDERED

Heads of the Educational Institutions Will Confer in Regard to the Cost of Education and Other Matters Affecting Public and Private Education.

This week President McConnell of DePauw will go to Indianapolis to meet with Governor Marshall and the presidents of the other colleges and universities of the state to confer on educational matters. Governor Marshall has invited many of the school men to this conference to see if it be possible to find an answer to many of the vexed questions of education now confronting the state, especially education at the state schools. It is generally believed that education for the few at the state colleges is costing the state too much money. It is now urged that education there costs much more than at the non-state schools both as to the state and student.

Then the governor also wishes to know if some method of controlling these schools can not be found that is superior to the present system of three boards, one for each of the three state schools. He will ask if it would be possible for a single board to handle the affairs of all the state school and thus prevent as far as possible the present duplication that is so expensive to the state's tax payers. Dr. McConnell has been collecting data along lines of college expense and will be a very interested and active member of the convention of educators.

BUDGE SAWYER IS DEAD

Noted Terre Haute Attorney Dies Suddenly at His Home of Complications Following an Attack of Grippe.

HAD MANY HARD CASES HERE

News was received this afternoon of the death, in Terre Haute, this morning of Judge James C. Sawyer of the firm of Lamb, Beasley and Sawyer. Mr. Sawyer had been ill for several days with grippe, but had not been considered seriously ill, so that his death comes as a surprise. The exact cause of the sudden demise is not known here.

Judge Rawley was counsel for the Big Four and had often appeared in the Putnam Circuit Court in the trial of cases. He was well known in Greencastle and also to many people in the county. He was associated with T. C. Grooms in a number of Big Four cases here during the past two years. In fact he was in Greencastle last Tuesday, and was preparing to try a case here during the next term of court.

NEW SUITS ARE FILED

First National Bank Sues to Set Aside Deed Alleged to Be Given to Defraud the Bank.

The First National Bank has brought suit against Welcome R. McElroy, Paul McElroy and Elizabeth McElroy to set aside a deed alleged to have been given by Paul McElroy to Elizabeth McElroy and covering real estate belonging to Paul McElroy. The suit alleges that Welcome R. and Paul McElroy gave a note to the First National Bank which is due and unpaid and that the bank was damaged by the failure to pay in the sum, with attorney's fees, of $450. The complaint alleged further that Paul conveyed away the real estate in question to prevent the bank levying upon it to secure the note. The plaintiff asks that the deed be set aside in order that the note may be made good.

Ellis Sluss has brought suit against Lawrence Love and numerous others to quiet the title to real estate in Putnam county.

OTIS SKINNER'S LATEST SUCCESS

There is no actor now before the American people whose annual appearance in Indianapolis awakens more interest among discerning patrons of the drama than does Otis Skinner, who is conceded to be one of the foremost players of the present day. The fact that he returns to Indianapolis next week for the premiere at English's Opera House of a new play by Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson gives the event an added interest which ought to appeal to all in this section of the State.

Mr. Skinner's new comedy, "Your Humble Servant" has just been brought out in Buffalo where the critics of that city are unanimous in praising it for its exquisite charm and novelty, and there is ample assurance that it will have a long and prosperous run. The authors, Messrs. Tarkington and Wilson, are, it is needless to say proud to claim the Hoosier State as the cradle of their earliest literary successors for both of these gifted dramatists were born and bred in Indiana. In providing Otis Skinner with a character befitting his versatile genius, they chose a entirely new and original theme, which is nothing less than a romantic picture of stage life and stage folk.

FIRST SNOW OF THE YEAR COMES

Sudden Change in the Temperature Brings the White Crystals.

FROST KILLS VEGETATION

Winter soon will be here. The first real cold snap, a forerunner of the winter season is here in good shape. The heaviest frost of the year came last night and this morning here was a little ice.

Vegetation which has withstood the light frosts of the past few weeks, succumbed to last night's temperature and this morning had turned black.

Several times during the day snow flakes have filled the air. The temperature during the day has been very cool and a bitter frost is promised for tonight.

BAND UNIFORMS ORDERED

LOCAL MUSICIANS TO APPEAR IN NATTY DARK BLUE OF LAST TEST STYLE.

MONEY RAISED IN VARIOUS WAYS

Mass Meeting Subscription Fees and Mass Meeting Subscription, Fees, and Uniforms were yesterday ordered for the DePauw band. The Pettibone Company of Cincinnati received the contract, agreeing to have the equipment ready for use in twenty-one days. The suits are to be of a dark blue color made in the style of the official United Musicians' Federation. The uniforms will be tailor made goods.

The members of the band have agreed to give the remuneration of Old Gold Day in addition to the one hundred and seventy-five dollars raised by subscription at the mass meeting held last Saturday evening. In payment of the balance the band boys will give personal notes to be paid out of money earned by the organization. It is expected that the suits will be entirely paid for before the year is over so that the band will then be equipped with uniforms equal to those of other large schools in the middle west.

Take a Sunshine Tablet for Thy Stomach's Sake

There never was such a marvelous prescription for stomach distress and indigestion as Mi-o-na.

No doctor ever wrote a better one; it's doubtful if any doctor ever will. It's so good that the Owl Drug store and Red Cross Pharmacy says money back if it doesn't cure.

A woman in Maine called Mi-o-na the sunshine prescription because she has seen so many sour, miserable, aggravating dyspeptics turned into happy, cheerful, sweet human beings turned into in a few days by taking Mi-o-na.

The stomach is responsible for three-fourths of the nervousness and half the misery of the world. A woman can have a first class stomach and yet be miserable if she has a husband who is a nervous dyspeptic.

If you have indigestion, belching of gas, heaviness after eating, drowsy sensation after eating, sour stomach or any miserable stomachic disturbance, the prescription called Mi-o-na will put you right, and bring sunshine into your life in a week.

A large box of Mi-o-na tablets cost only 50 cents at the Owl Drug store and Red Cross Pharmacy and by leading druggists everywhere. They are small and easy to swallow.

TRY OUTS FOR GLEE CLUB

WILL BE HELD NEXT THURSDAY AFTERNOON - WORK TO BEGIN SOON.

ENJOYABLE TRIP BEING PLANNED

Visit to Points in Blue Grass Country - Other Features.

Professor Rufus B. von Kleinsmid, principal of the Academy and head of the department of pedagogy, will direct the Glee Club again this year. The voices will be picked on next Thursday afternoon, October 14, at 1:15 o'clock in Meharry Hall. Professor Kleinsmid will meet those who were on last year's club on Wednesday afternoon at 1:15 o'clock in his office in West College.

The work preparatory to the two trips which the club will take on this year will begin soon after the voices are picked. The management is now attempting to close up all negotiations for dates during the Christmas vacation trip and although it is impossible to make a complete announcement of the itinerary it is decided that it will extend through Southern Indiana and Northern Kentucky.

The Club this year will be one of the best that has gone out from DePauw within recent years and it is bound to attract attention. The popularity of the club through Indiana is marked and already plans for entertaining the members are being made by several of the towns which are to be visited.

Whatsoever of truth there was in these sinister reports, certain it is that none of these three young men ever returned from the wooing. Then Pietro Calceoni, count of Malpaga, who had just succeeded to his family estates, met Bianca at Rome, fell under her spell and begged her to marry him. She replied that she would give him his answer at her father's castle on Lake Maggiore, where he was invited to be the guest the following month at the fall of the moon.

The young count was warned to disregard the invitation and keep away from one whose suitors had been, to say the least, so unlucky. But no one whom Bianca smiled could ever be induced to heed a warning. Pietro could barely wait for the days to elapse when he should visit the girl he loved—to be made happy, he believed—and the moon was no sooner half full than he set out from Rome on his journey northward. Reaching the lower end of the lake, he embarked and soon saw the rock of the Peretti's looming ahead of him. He was received by Count Peretti, Bianca's father, and entertained sumptuously.

After dining Pietro drew Bianca away on to a terrace and begged for her reply. "I will give it," she said, "on the summit of the rock." Daring forward, she led the way in the mangled twilight and moonlight to the path, which zigzagged upward, Pietro followed and was soon started on a mad chase. The girl, light as a bird, kept always the lead. The lover now and again looked up to see her on the road ahead, which to gain height had been turned in an opposite direction. She gazed down on him, an enchanting witchery in her eyes. Though he hurried to his utmost ability, he could never catch her. One moment he would be looking out on to the blue lake, the silhouette mountains and the full pale orb beyond. The next his glance would meet those eyes that were lifting him as the moon draws the ocean. And all the while within him was a fever that was consuming him. At times when he turned a sharp angle in the path his brain reeled, and he was like to fall hundreds of feet below. But there, always above him, and grasping the guard rail, he stumbled on.

At last the top was reached, a pinnacle of circular rock. And there, in the depths of Lovers' bower, reflecting the moon, were two bright eyes. The count approached and Bianca shrank back. His hand touched hers. A thrill shot to his very heart.

There remains a fragment of the slab with the two stone supports on which Bianca Peretti and Pietro Calceoni sat side by side.

"Oh, Bianca," cried Pietro, "Have you brought me to this pinnacle the easier to lift me into heaven?"

She rose and, walking hand in hand with him, advanced to the edge of the cliff. Twice she paused and directed his gaze to the entrancing scene above, about, beneath them, and thrice again she turned those witch eyes upon him. Then, standing with him on the verge, she suddenly stepped back and gave him a push.

Men in the little boat below, which by this time had approached the cliff, saw the moon glitter on something—doubtless an ornament worn by the count—falling from the summit of the Peretti rock and heard a splash. Pulling in the direction from which the sound came, they drew a dead body from the lake.

There is no record of any subsequent wooing of Bianca Peretti. A mystery hangs over her end. It is written that she suffered death for the murder of Count Calceoni, and it is written that she married one of the most powerful robber barons in Italy.

LOVERS' BOWER.

By F. A. MITCHELL.
(Copyright, 1939, by American Press Association.)

Out of Lake Maggiore, in northern Italy, rises a sheer rock to a height of several hundred feet. On a park where the eminence slopes is an estate acquired by the Peretti family during the middle ages, when Italian territory was being divided up between the gentlemen robbers of that period. The stronghold built by Peretti is now a ruin, and of this little remains. Yet one may climb the ascent from it to the summit of the rock, proceeding here and there over short spaces of the old path by which the Peretti's frequently ascended to hurl missiles down on an attacking foe. There remain on this pinnacle a few weather beaten stones which tradition calls "Lovers' bower."

Of all the daughters of the house of Peretti, Bianca, who lived at a time when the Borgias were eminent at Rome, was the most beautiful and the most celebrated. Report said that her heart was as cold as her face was heavenly. Indeed, there were whisperings that danger lurked under her snowy bosom as the bee is hidden within the dower. Several young nobles who had met her at foreign courts traveled to her home on Lake Maggiore to propose for her hand. There they met misfortune. One was said to have fallen ill of a fever, and, although the barber on the Peretti estate let nearly all the blood out of his body in an effort to save him, the young man died. Another was said to have left the castle as a storm was rising. His boat was wrecked, and he was drowned. It was rumored that a third suitor had been accidentally killed in fencing with the lady he wooed, she having declared that she would marry him if he could vanquish her with the foil. But there were those who averred that this man was sent to his death purposely by the ferocious Bianca.

Whatever of truth there was in these sinister reports, certain it is that none of these three young men ever returned from the wooing. Then Pietro Calceoni, count of Malpaga, who had just succeeded to his family estates, met Bianca at Rome, fell under her spell and begged her to marry him. She replied that she would give him his answer at her father's castle on Lake Maggiore, where he was invited to be the guest the following month at the fall of the moon.

Her Lesson In Loving

It Was a Severe One, but It Brought Her Happiness

By LOUISE OLNEY

Copyright, 1939, by Associated Literary Press.

After a good night so listless that her mother sighed at the change in her daughter, Anne Morton went to her room and locked the door. Throwing aside her lace cloak, she turned on all the lights and, tall and graceful in her clinging yellow gown, studied herself in the mirror.

Richard Hunter had not asked for a single dance, but had devoted himself to Mollie Pierce. Anne began to realize that this had been the order of things for some time. Morris Trevor also had not come near. And only a year ago, before she had broken her engagement with Richard, there had not been dances enough to satisfy her admirers. Surely at twenty-seven a woman has not lost the power to attract! Was she becoming a wallflower?

The mirror was reassuring. Her fine brown eyes were large and clear, her heavy dark hair perfectly arranged, her oval face and small head certainly distinguished. She smiled ruefully, and a dimple deepened in her cheek. But when her face fell to repose she noted critically that she looked bored, almost unhappy; the corners of her mouth drooped and two cross little lines showed between her eyes.

Anne began to take stock of herself. Tonight she had actually sat out three dances with the chaperons. She faced the fact that her friends were becoming fewer; that the men called less often. Invited her less often to share their pleasures. "The girls" no longer dropped in to gossip of clothes and merry-making and teas. Yes, even in the family they had banished her mother, always loving, was also banished. Harry, with the frankness of fourteen, remarked, when she was irritated with him, that she was becoming a cross old maid. Jean assumed condescending younger sister airs.

She was quite sure that it was Richard's place to make the first move toward reconciliation, even though she admitted to herself that the fault had been mostly hers. At last she went to bed and cried herself to sleep. But she awoke early, so much earlier than usual that, as she lay thinking, it came to her that not for months had she really seen her father, not for months had she breakfasted with the family. On impulse she rose, took a cold plunge and dressed for the street. She had nearly finished when the rising bell rang.

She stood nervously adjusting her collar at the mirror, a little sensitive about going down lest some member of the family might comment on her unwonted presence, when she noted that she looked positively cross. It made her seem old. She by an effort made herself smile, and the dimple again showed itself. Then she started for the door just in time to encounter Harry, who was coming with an old gown to awaken her. Yesterday she would have complained to her mother; today she laughed as he scampered back to his room to finish dressing.

When she heard the breakfast bell she started slowly downstairs, and as she reached the lower hall she caught her own name spoken by her mother in an anxious tone. Involuntarily she paused. Her father replied:

"Don't worry, mother, Anne needs a lesson in loving. She will have to suffer till she finds out that no woman is loved and sought unless she is loving—lovable. She will not be her old attractive self till she stops being bored and sarcastic and is pleased and interested and shows that she is. She is getting selfish, and nothing but thinking of others will do her any good."

"But, Fred," her mother's voice continued, "Richard never came near her last night nor Morris nor Henry Parker. Do you suppose they resent her treatment of Richard? And she is never about when our older friends call and never up in the morning. Has it occurred to you that Richard may have shown her he wanted to break with her and that she is unhappy about it? Last night he was so devoted to Mollie Pierce!"

"Nonsense! Richard simply had a real man's self respect. She dismissed him for nothing, and I don't blame him for not crawling back like a whipped puppy. Perhaps he is getting interested in Mollie—a live young fellow is not going to let the caprice of one woman spoil life for him. He did care. He told me himself when it first happened that he was all cut up about it, but that she would have to call him back herself. She hasn't done so. Well, there is nobody like him. Yes, another cap, dear, please." Anne fled softly back to her room, her cheeks and eyes ablaze, fury in her heart. How dared they! How dared they discuss her affairs and side with Richard! Then it came upon her that these two dear persons, the dearest in the world, loved her and had a right to say to each other what they thought about their own child.

And they were right—that was the worst of it. What should she do? After a moment's hesitation she went quietly down and took her place at the table, bidding them good morning as if nothing had occurred. Harry and Jean came chasing each other down the hall to join the family, and then everybody seemed to begin talking and laughing. In spite of herself Anne became interested. She laughed, and at her new good nature Harry offered to play golf with her—supreme condescension on his part. She accepted.

Then as her father left his office, she followed another impulse; she offered to walk to the office with him for the exercise. His eyes widened a little with surprise, but they started off joyfully together, father and tall daughter, arm in arm, through the crisp autumn air the full mile downtown. It was a good mile, and the air stung a red stain into her cheek.

Leaving her father at his office, she started back, remembering her "date" on the links with her brother. She had an hour yet and was minded to wander off by herself and think. At heart she was still furious and a little fearful about Richard's supposed change of heart. Mollie Pierce, indeed! That little silly doll! Yet stranger things had happened. She suddenly realized what a blank she had made of her own life. She turned into a quiet side street and walked swiftly along, hardly seeing where she went. Once she raised a hand to wipe her eyes—they smarted strangely. Everything was strange, especially this new, fearful awakening from the apathetic dream she seemed to have been lost in for a year. Of course it was too late for Richard to forgive her, but at least she could make it up to her dear family.

Remembering that she must meet her brother, she suddenly turned a corner and ran into a big man who, from the impact, must have been coming along at some speed. She gasped to see that it was Richard, as astonished as she, gazing at her as if he had never seen her before, at her fresh color, her bright eyes, the fugitive tear on her cheek. He hardly knew what he said, but she laughed merrily.

"I really did not intend to—knock you down! I'm sorry, Dick." She called him Dick with manifest good feeling. The man's heart leaped as he looked at her glowing face. He turned to walk with her a little.

"Going home? You don't look like a girl who danced till 11 this morning, Anne, I must say."

"I sat out three dances," she answered coolly. "Harry says I'm getting to be a cross old maid. Is that why you did not ask me for a walk?" "You have refused me so many times I began to accept my fate. I—" "I'm sorry—Dick." She interrupted him to say what she would not even have thought a few days before. "I'm sorry," she repeated.

He turned to her eagerly. "Anne," he said in a low voice, "you could not possibly cross your heart and hope to die and say you are sorry for anything else. Oh, Anne, could you?" She only nodded an instant while she swallowed the remnant of her old pride. He was looking down at her, glorying in her blush. Then she spoke fully and freely, gladly.

"I treated you very badly, and I am very sorry, Dick." Her eyes, full of tears, bravely met his gaze. Of course Richard Hunter knew he could not kiss her on the street, but he also knew that it would not be long till they reached her home. He knew, too, that whatever demonstration he made Anne's mother would not care. He bided his time. Meantime he and Anne were very happy.

A Cure For Balking.

A farmer thus cured a horse of balking:

He went to a stack of wood for a small load, but his horse would not pull a pound. He did not beat him, as most men would have done, but simply tied him to a tree and left him there. At sunset he went to the stack again, but the horse still refused to draw. So he put a blanket on him and left him there for the night. In the morning he still refused to draw, but at noon, being hungry, he started at once and drew the load to the house. The farmer then returned and got another load before feeding him and then gave him a good dinner.—London Family Herald.

A TELEGRAPH JOKER.

He Knew What the Crowd Wanted and Delivered the Goods.

ELECTION RETURNS TO SUIT.

Swung States and National Chairmen Into Line in His Reports and Gave the Boys of the Mining Camp the Time of Their Lives.

A funny incident happened on the night of the national election of 1896 in a little camp tucked away in the mountains of southwestern Colorado, where the only means of quick communication with the world were a single uncertain telegraph wire and a single more uncertain telegraph operator. Naturally only the merest scraps of election news reached the camp, but before the certain news of McKinley's election could have been got the uncertain operator had fallen a victim to his favorite vice and, further, had fallen beneath the table.

The only other person who knew anything about telegraphy was "Shorty," the local wit and humorist, who volunteered to write out the election returns as they clicked off from the telegraph instrument. Political sentiment was adum for Bryan. News of his election was not only sought, but demanded, for the average American miner is as sanguine concerning the uncertainties of politics as he is concerning the uncertainties of mining. The volunteer telegrapher was noted for an obliging disposition. He was the "genial" of the camp.

The "boys" had placed stores of giant powder at various points. They had cleaned and oiled their six shooters and refilled their cartridge belts. Bonfires were ready to be lighted on the hillsides, and natural enthusiasm had been stimulated at the Metropolis, the Cosmopolitan, the Fashion, the Trocadero and less pretentiously named ones in the desert of mining camp existence—in fact, every preliminary to the grandest celebration the San Juan country ever had known.

Shorty was not the man to neglect an opportunity like that. The first bulletin he handed to the waiting crowd stated that New York and Indiana were in doubt and it looked like a close election, with the chances favoring Bryan. That whetted the crowd's keen appetite for returns to razor edge. The second bulletin sent their spirits up with a leap. "Bryan has carried Kansas, and the Democrats are claiming Iowa."

"Whoopee!" from the crowd. Shorty bent his ear to the clicking sounder and inscribed "Bulletin No. 3—Illinois joins the Bryan column with 50,000 majority. Indiana certain, New York very close."

When the deafening chorus had died down a young member of the party asked the leader, "Hadden't we better begin to set off the giant?"

Before the leader could answer Shorty reproved him by word and look. "Don't go off half cocked," he said. "It's always best to wait until you are sure. You can't be too conservative in a case like this."

After a long pause, in which the crowd displayed much impatience, the imperturbable and conservative Shorty transcribed bulletin No. 4, but before passing it out he said:

"Now, boys, don't do anything rash. Wait for the actual returns."

Bulletin No. 4 read, "Senator Jones claims Ohio and Pennsylvania for Bryan."

Under ordinary circumstances a doubt might have been expressed concerning the probability of such states reversing their political records, but the crowd was convinced of an impending landslide for their favorite and yelled with delight. "Now we are beginning to get the news," remarked Shorty when the cheering ceased, and he began to write bulletin No. 5 as follows:

"New York gives Bryan 100,000 plurality; Indiana, 40,000. Returns from Wisconsin and Minnesota indicate large Democratic gains."

The crowd heard only the first sentence. Shouting, cheering, yelling, screaming, it broke for the street. "Hold on!" called Shorty. "Here's another."

Bulletin No. 6, "Quay concedes Pennsylvania to Bryan."

Another fragment broke from the crowd and ran down the street shouting the news. The new operator's pencil was traveling rapidly over the paper, while his friends and fellow citizens crowded closely upon him and read as he wrote bulletin No. 7, "Mark Hanna has locked up Republican headquarters and gone home."

The roar of the crowd was drowned by the roar of exploding giant powder. Buildings shook, windows rattled, accompanied by the crash of broken glass. The celebration was on, and Shorty McIntyre was alone.

The celebration lasted for two days. The morning after election the regular operator had recovered sufficiently to transcribe messages announcing McKinley's victory. Those who were sober enough to understand them didn't believe them. After several warnings of what would happen to him if he didn't quit "trying to fool people" the operator desisted and joined in the general jubilation. Not until the arrival of the Denver papers on the second day did that camp awake to a realization of the outcome of the election, and then there was not sufficient energy left to vent even indignation upon Shorty, much less to take revenge. On the third day the volunteer operator was more popular than ever, for all admitted he had given them the best of their lives.—New York Pe t.

THE MUMCIE CONVENTION

even for a convention. I want to serve notice on you good men that you have done good work driving saloons from your back yard; do not get it into your heads that we think you have done your full duty until you line up and drive the saloons from the entire state.

An excellent address was given by Dr. F. J. Hutchins, professor of Nervous Diseases and consulting physician of Indianapolis hospital. He spoke of the effect of alcohol on the human system, saying that it was a poison to all living organisms. He said that most children of pronounced drinkers die early and that those who are left are feeble minded or epileptic.

The session on Saturday for the most part business. A message was ordered sent to General Frederick Dent Grant because of his recent stand when criticism from the liquor forces was made when the son of the former great general participated in a temperance parade at Chicago clad in the uniform of his official rank in the United States army. A letter was sent to Governor Marshall expressing appreciation and thanking him for the good things he had done for the temperance movement.

Sunday was a great day for Muncie, beginning with Sunday School and continuing throughout all the services, the convention church was crowded, many went to other churches to hear speakers of state and national reputation.

The great mass meeting was at 3:15 in the afternoon. Dr. Fulton said: "The temperance reform is no longer in a sentimental stage. It has gone beyond the theoretical stage down to the bed rock. The movement sweeps the country."

At the Sunday night meeting Mrs. Stanley made an earnest plea for prohibition and also a constitutional amendment forever prohibiting the manufacture and sale of liquor within our borders.

Monday's session was crowded full with business; the reports of organizers and superintendents were completed; also the reports of the different committees.

Delegates to the National Convention at Omaha were then elected. Putnam, Lawrence, Monroe and Morgan were entitled to one delegate. Mrs. S. F. Toner was elected, with Mrs. Mary G. Webb of our own city as alternate.

The officers elected are: President, Mrs. Culla J. Vaylenger, Upland; Vice president, Mrs. Elizabeth Stanley, Liberty; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Rose Rose Pierce; Corresponding Secretary, Miss Mary E. Woodard, Fountain City; Treasurer, Miss Clara Sears, Anderson; Loyalty Temperance Secretary, Ida Mix, Kokomo; Secretary, Misses Laura Cammack, Converse.

The Noble Pike.

In size, in courage and in strength the pike rivals in historic claim to nobility King Edward I, who fixed the price of fish then brought to market, rated the pike above the salmon and more than ten times higher than that of the best cod or turbot. In the reign of Henry VIII, a large one was sold for double the price of a house lamb in February and a small pike for more than a fat capon. Its greater reputation is probably to be explained by the old custom in the great houses and abbeys of England of having their private stew ponds, so that fresh water fish were the luxury of the rich, while the salmon could be caught in the sea and so never attained the rank and dignity of fashionable food. Today his artificial value is gone, and the salmon has taken the place upon the tables of the rich as much for the beauty of its pink flesh as for the superior flavor of the meat.—London Globe.

A Brave Answer.

There was sharp fighting between the English and French in the Windward islands in 1778 when General Meadows conquered St. Lucia not, however, without himself being severely wounded at the very beginning of the engagement. The general, though wounded, would not leave the field for a moment, and when the action was over he visited every wounded officer and man before he would receive the surgeon's attention himself. His heart was greatly cheered by an answer given to him by a young subaltern, Lieutenant Gomm of the Forty-sixth regiment, who in the heat of action was wounded in the eye.

"I hope you have not lost your eye, Lieutenant," said the general.

"I believe I have sir," replied Gomm, "but with the other I shall see you victorious this day."

The brave young fellow had his wish.—London Scraps.

A dago was carried through Indianapolis on the Big Four last night and put off here. The man could not talk English nor could anyone be found who could talk with him. He was to have met friends in Indianapolis but the train conductor failed to put him off there. The man was sent back to Indianapolis on a morning train.
